

CGES Program for Joint Student-and-Teacher Papers on European Societies

Centre for German and European Studies (St Petersburg University – Bielefeld University) invites Russian MA students and teachers to take part in the dedicated CGES program aiming to support preparation and publication of papers based on Master's theses. The program is intended to support submission of joint articles by students and teachers (particularly, their supervisors) in European peer-reviewed journals focused on the studies of European societies.

The program is offered throughout every year and includes the following opportunities:

1. Participation in the CGES annual Russian-European research paper competition for graduate and postgraduate students in social sciences and humanities, taking place every late November in St. Petersburg, applications, including a paper draft, being collected every October ;
2. Participation in the CGES annual Russian-European seminar on paper preparation and publication in international scientific journals under the guidance of a European instructor, taking place every late November in St. Petersburg, applications being collected every November ;
3. CGES workshop for student-and-teacher papers discussion, taking place every April in St. Petersburg, applications being collected every March.

Authors of student-and-teacher papers (1) successfully submitted¹ to an internationally visible² journal focused on European societies (e.g., European Societies) before the end of July, (2) having attended two or more of the events above, and (3) acknowledging the CGES support³ are entitled to a CGES travel grant to present their paper at the European Sociological Association meeting or a specialized conference in Europe.

¹ Manuscript was not desk-rejected and entered the peer-review process, which is confirmed by an email from the publisher/editor or a paper submission system screenshot.

² Indexed in Web of Science Core Collection and/or Scopus (Q2 or higher).

³ Students and teachers of the MA 'Studies in European Societies' should also explicitly indicate it as (one of) their affiliation(s) in the paper.
